

Abstract

This paper will discuss Chronic Kidney Disease (CKD) in El Salvador and its significance as a global health issue. A literature review will be summarized on five research articles associated with this global health issue and its development and possible causes among the population in EL Salvador. An overview of an action plan to assist with eradicating this global health issue and description of methods for implementation will be discussed. Explanation of strengths and barriers of this implementation as well as future recommendations will be discussed. Lastly, role of Doctor of Nursing Practice (DNP) will be described in relation to this global health issue.
